Pentru a beneficia de posibilitatea salvării întregului parcurs de căutare sau de activarea unei alerte de citare, trebuie activat un cont personal, din tab-ul „Login”

The image shows the 'Login to continue' page on the Taylor & Francis eBooks website. It features two main options: 'Login with Institution' (with a building icon) and 'Login with ORCID' (with an 'id' icon). Both options are circled in yellow. Below these is an 'OR' separator. Further down are input fields for 'Email' and 'Password', followed by a 'Forgot password?' link. At the bottom is a large blue 'LOGIN' button. Below the login button, the text 'Don't have an account yet' is followed by a 'Register' link, which is also circled in yellow. A yellow arrow points from the 'Register' link to the registration page on the right.

The image shows the 'Create account' page on the Taylor & Francis eBooks website. It has a title 'Create account' and several input fields: 'First Name', 'Last Name', 'Email', 'Country', and 'Password'. Below the fields is a paragraph of text explaining that Taylor & Francis Group uses the details to create an account and may use the email for marketing. There are two checkboxes: 'If you do not want to receive marketing communication from us, please tick the box' and 'I agree to the Terms & Conditions'. At the bottom is a large blue 'CREATE ACCOUNT' button, which is circled in yellow. Below the button is a link 'Already have an account? Login now'.

* În cazul în care alegeți să vă înregistrați utilizând contul ORCID, vă exprimați acordul pentru preluarea automată a informațiilor necesare înregistrării (nume, prenume etc.).

ABSTRACT

This chapter explores the “part-whole” nature of urban economies, traces “part-whole” thinking in economic thought – from Adam Smith to Alfred Marshall to Paul Krugman – before exploring its relevance to a specific urban economy, that of Greater Manchester. The chapter emphasizes that urban economies are highly relational, with certain industry sectors being more strongly connected to each other than others. It models the particular interdependences likely to be embedded in Greater Manchester’s economy using industry relatedness analysis. It focuses in particular on the potential for skills and labour sharing between industries, and the sharing of products in supply chains. The part-whole structure of this urban economy is shown to have hierarchy, with sub- communities associated with “communities of production” and “skills-basins”. Certain economic communities are shown to be particularly important to Greater Manchester, including those centred around ‘textiles and clothing’, and ‘chemicals, energy and gases’. While some economic communities are relatively inward looking, others are shown to be more closely intertwined with the rest of the urban economy. The chapter concludes by comparing Greater Manchester’s industry relatedness with that of other UK cities including neighbouring Sheffield.
